Her left eye is a slightly unusual reddish color, the color of which I cannot describe, but it is most definitely noticeable. The right eye is the eye my father could see. Her visage is familiar to me and I would like to think that familiarity goes both ways: the son looks to me for some of his father's looks. "Tell you what," he says. "If the girl makes it, I'll quit smoking." "Get in line." I laugh, and snort. ~I'll quit smoking.~ He laughs too. "It's amazing the concessions we make to people around us." "After all, this is not my choice." "You're right." That's all we say until the plane starts to descend. And then we talk about stupid stuff. The earth is turning, and as it does, it is creating mountains and valleys, rivers and streams. And yet some things never change. Never. ~Find something you love doing so much you can't imagine doing anything else.~ "There is no other life but this." "What is that
